While the topic is important to my mission this report is only interesting, not particularly useful. We already have mandatory training for all employees at every level that covers this topic and we can all cite numerous examples. What would make this more useful, give it more impact, would be to hear some follow-up information that comes from a see-something, say-something piece of information. People at this point want to know that their telephone calls matter, not that they are urged to make those calls.

While the main mission and focus of OPM/FIS concerns Personnel Security and clearance matters, it is important for OPM/FIS Field Agents to remain aware and alert to suspicious activities and circumstances they may encounter while conducting fieldwork. These Agents have near-daily contact with the general public in various ways across the U.S. and can be used as another set of "eyes and ears" in detecting and recognizing strange and/or suspicious activities that can be indications or warning signs of intent to conduct an attack or the desire to plan on doing so.

I have all our national lab security personnel management on this distribution list as I am a believer in it. We now find it very broad and of little value due to overwhelming number of topics and threats with typical questionable credibility. Suggest use software to wade thru the boatload of average intelligence to make more region specific and user capable from a LEA type perspective. We remain appreciative of these efforts. (U//FOUO) The document does a good job of providing an overview of these groups and how they operate. The table was helpful in giving insight into past activities and the drivers for the attacks. The pattern of attacks listed in "Table 1" was informative; however, there was not any new information within the report. Also, information within the "Methods and Capabilities" section is a little misleading. SQL injection attacks are not advanced nor are they complex. (b) (7)(E)

The product would have served the community better by pointing out that most of the tactics used by the Anonymous and LulzSec can be defeated by properly testing our web applications on a routine basis. IDS and IPS devices are a must have on the network; however, the deployment of those canned solutions will not prevent these attacks from happening. Under "Mitigation" the key point should be that all forward facing web apps and sites must properly validate input and must be tested to ensure that this validation is taking place.

In support of the National Network of Fusion Centers and their partners it's critical that information be provided as soon as possible. The release of this product seemed a little dated. Cyber threats are of particular interest to not only our intelligence and LE partners but to our critical infrastructure partners as well. We need to find a way to tie in critical infrastructure partners. Further, predictive analysis, risk analysis and threat assessments should be a reoccurring theme of cyber products. To my knowledge there has not been established a Cyber POC within the fusion centers for collaboration and analytical contribution. Inclusion of a fusion center or regional SME at the State and Local level seems like a prudent idea.

A lot of the activities mentioned occurred quite a while ago. More timely release of a reports such as this would be helpful. Also, more actionable detail would be useful. For instance, SQL injection is noted. What were the systems? Were they commercial or custom applications? What sorts of SQL injection techniques were used. These pieces of information would help an enterprise harden systems, or at least identify similar vulnerabilities and aid in monitoring for, sharing information on, and educating peers on similar activity that might otherwise go undetected and/or unreported.

Even though many times this product uses broad interpretation of threats and usually the threats are general in nature. This product is useful. The specific trends of extremist activities and their probable associated outcomes help first responders in non law enforcement positions understand what threats are trending. This will help them understand what some of the risks and vulnerabilities are in their perspective communities. Drilling down the trends and threats on a regional basis is needed. Using the above information such as "Communication with or links to violent extremists, either through direct contact or virtually" how would someone go about noticing this issue? What type of communication links? Where does this occur publicly? What type of communication is subject to scrutiny? Since these types of questions cannot be answered by the non law enforcement first responder this product is not utilized fully. It is understood that expansion of these issues is costly and can make the product cumbersome to understand. Balance to these issues to keep these products streamlined is critical to the success. The product was vague in providing the type of material support the subject was providing. The only mention of this was in the first paragraph where it reads "he is charged with provision and attempted provision of personnel to the Islamic Jihad Union." I believe this activity should have been elaborated on. All it mentions below that is that he planned to go overseas (by himself) to fight against US and Coalition forces.

I am really more interested in what is happening locally with intelligence, although I do recognized the importance of incidents happening in the world that affects us all.
I would like to see some sort of metal theft intelligence group initiated by this group Really appreciated the inclusion of the elicitation reports. My cleared personnel seem to be more interested and can relate to and retain the information better when "real-life" stories are included in briefings. Hope to see more of these types of reports in future material that can be included in company security briefings.

Read my comment at para 4 above. We want to know what happens when a credible report is called in. OK, not all cases will be like the Ft. Dix case but even if we learn that for example the person asking about the chemical plant was a student film maker developing a story line for a documentary - that would be evidence of follow-up, which is what people are looking for. Do these calls really matter!?

If this is recent activity, having awareness of the vicinity these inquiries took place might alert responders in that area to hyper-vigilance. while the general information was a great reminder, local agencies should have more of a heads up.
